The good: The HTC Desire features a sleek design with a sharp and responsive touch screen. The 1GHz Snapdragon processor keeps things running smoothly, and call quality is good.

The bad: No voice dialing over Bluetooth. Camera and camcorder quality are so-so.

The bottom line: Sleek and fast, the HTC Desire is not only U.S. Cellular's best Android device but the carrier's best smartphone to date.

"One of the best mobiles currently available. Fantastic!" on August 19, 2010 by Nyadach (1 review)

Pros: Screen is fantastic, pin sharp and beautiful. The Sense user interface is slick, smooth and many great customisations.

Camera is fantastic, and will easily outperform the 3GS camera and many 8mp camera's on phones for colour and sharpness.

Cons: Screen in direct sunlight outside can be hard to see due to reflections.

At first the battery can be drained in 6-8hrs, after a few full charges this is fixed, or replaced with a higher capacity battery. Just a bit worrying when you first buy it.

Summary: First using the Desire the Sense user interface really strikes you along with the screen (the screen is only very fractionally less as high resolution as the Iphone4, but nothing you can actually see when using it unless you use it at nose length). The smooth scrolling, swishing of panels, ... Expand full review
